WAR CAUSES INDUSTRIAL BOOM

Democrats Would Like to Take Credit for Prospect of Better Times, But They Know That When Peace Comes Foreign Goods Will Again Come into the United States.

Philadelphia, Aug. 2.—Leading Democrats throughout Pennsylvania cannot see why the people do not thank the Wilson administration for the prospect of better times due to the war. They feel that it would be only fair to the Democratic party for Pennsylvania citizens to delude themselves into believing that the present government at Washington had something to do with the signs of coming briskness in the industrial world.

The strange feature of this idea is that many of these Democrats, when questioned, are how it enough to admit that the war is the cause of any increase in the work of industries, insinuating as they do that any credit or discredit for starting the war is their position is, therefore, both peculiar and ridiculous.

Sum Up Situation.

Here is how the Philadelphia Bulletin sums up the situation regarding the necessity of revising the tariff to take care of American industries in years to come:

"An intimate and familiar example for Philadelphia is in the history and kult goods industry, the local plants of which are not enjoying a good market in the United States, and therefore, under ordinary conditions, ship their products into the United States at prices with which the American manufacturer, paying the American tariff, cannot compete.
Subject to American labor laws, cannot compete, are out of competition on account of the war. And it is an example of the work of organization that when the war is over, and the work of rehabilitation begins—which will not be difficult because the actual industrial destruction has been comparatively slight—there will be acute poor in the United States and take away the demand for home labor."

Common Sense Judgment.

When Democrats attempt to use the argument that better times—if they come—are due to the excellent working of the present tariff, by itself considered, they run up against the common sense judgment of the people.
For that reason some of them admit that the war is responsible, though they would like the voters at large to give the party credit.

Every person who is capable of observing the course of events must know that present conditions are temporary—that they are dependent upon the stagnation of foreign industry.
If it were not so, why were there no indications of a turn for the better soon after the war broke out, and why did the nation suffer so serious a period of depression soon after the new tariff was enacted, when before it enjoyed full and plenty, comparable only with the best times we have had in a generation? There is a reason, and the reason is not difficult to find out.

Democrats are making the remarkable statement that the high cost of living "is caused by the war in Europe, and by abnormal conditions caused by it." Yet in 1913, two years before the war started, the Democracy claimed that the high cost of living was due to the "robber Trusts." When the Republicans were in power they were to blame for the "high cost of living," now that the Democratics are in, the "war" is to blame.
That is to say, the Democracy is never to blame for anything objectionable, no matter when or how it happens. Anyway, it does not make so much difference what caused the high cost of living; the thing of importance is, what will reduce it? The Democrats said if the people would put them in, they would do the trick.
They are in and they have not done it.

Bury Six Hundred Eastland Victims While Whole City of Chicago Mourns

The Department of Labor under the direction of the Wilson administration has prepared a statement on the cost of living which shows that meats have gone up 10 per cent, since the last presidential election. Yet meats are on the free list. The price of milk has increased 3 per cent, and eggs slightly more than 3 per cent.
Milk and eggs are on the free list.

The Payne-Albright duty on eggs was 5 cents a dozen. It was raised in order to reduce the cost of living.
When the wage earner studies this report, he will realize the falsity of statements made by Free-Trade speakers during the campaign which resulted in the election of Woodrow Wilson. The oft-repeated story that high prices were the result of the tariff is refuted by the facts contained in the report. The remarkable rise in price has taken place in spite of the Free-Trade Underwood law which placed no duties on the free list. It is the great injury of the farmer and its experience shows, without benefit to the consumer.

SAVED HIMSELF, UNAWARE.

Showing How the Eye Sees More Than One Thing It Does.

Written on psychological subjects in the Ladies' Home Journal, H. Addison Bruce says:

"From Dr. A. H. of Pennsylvania, one of our well known psychologists, I have received this impressive piece of testimony to the power of the eye to see more than one consciously apprehends:

"Three summers ago, when I was on a visit to my old home town, I took a short cut across familiar fields where a fair growth of weeds covered the ground. I was going along at a run, gait, with my mind wholly occupied with matters other than my path, when suddenly, quite suddenly, my left foot, instead of going down on the spot where it should, jerked itself over to the left, and I went on fully ten steps before I realized that I had made the sharpest kind of an offset in my path. I wondered what made me do it, turned, retraced my steps, and found an adler still edified and ready to strike, exactly as I judged, where my foot would have gone."

"Dr. A. H., recognizing the correct explanation of his fortunate misstep, adds:

"During my boyhood summers I used to go barefooted much of the time, though not experience with timber fields, briar patches, and many other paths I learned automatically to pick my way without giving thought to the matter. As a result, I find myself frequently in my walks avoiding obstacles which at the moment I do not consciously discern."

A Curious Experience.

London, Aug. 2.—An Italian crimi-nologist once had a curious experience. He was in a printing office correcting the proofs in his "Delinquent Man" with the child reader when on reaching a page which dealt with it a young man who impelled by jealousy had stabbled his master's hand made a surprising discovery. The proofreader asked this man:

"Suddenly," Lombroso said in telling the story, "he threw himself at my feet, declaring that he would commit suicide if I published this story with his name. His face, before very gently, was completely altered and almost terrifying, and I was really afraid that he would kill himself on me on the spot.
I tore up the proofs and for several editions omitted his story."

Thunder.

Winter thunder is considered throughout Europe to be of very ill omen, but April thunder is considered to be very beneficial. In Devonshire and other older counties of England there is a saying that "when it thunders in April you must clean up the barrels"—in readiness, that is, for a plentiful crop of apples. The French consider April thunder to be indicative of a good yield from vineyards and cornfields.

Getting It Straight.

It was in the Elysium fields, "of an gentle life," as that Shakespeare is more sought after than the military heroes," declared a highborn shade. "I consider this a tribute to the powerful acts."

"It isn't so much," pointed out a leftbrow shade, "every now and then wants to ask him if he really wrote those plays?"—Knox City Journal.

There never was an excuse as interesting as a duty well done.—Toledo Blade.

A LESSON FOR THE NURSE.

She Didn't Like It When She Was Paid
In Her Own Coat.

A mother overheard her nurse girl talking to the child she was putting to sleep, and among other legends of the nursery in which she was lulled was this:
"If you don't go to sleep this very minute a great big awful black bear, with eyes like coals of fire and sharp, white, cruel teeth, WILL come out from under the bed and eat-te-eat-eat you!"

The poor little thing nestled down under the clothes to dream of horrid bears eating her up.

That night when the stolid nurse had composed herself in her own comfortable bed and had put the light out there came a sudden rap at the door and the voice of the mistress called loudly through the panels: "Nurse!
Mangle! Get up as quick as you can!"

"There's a burglar under your bed!" At the word "burglar" the girl sprang screaming from the bed, tore open the door and fell into hysterics in the hall.

The nurse was more instructive than the mistress deserved, but when the girl's fears had calmed she said to her:
"You did not hesitate to tell my dear child, who could not possibly know that it was a lie, a cruel story about a bear under her bed. Now, when I treat you to a same kind of a story, you are nearly frightened to death. Tomorrow you can go into the kitchen and work there. You are not to care for little children!"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Circumstances Alter Cases.

Stern Father—It was after 11 o'clock when that young man left last night.
I want you to understand—Pretty Daughter (interrupting)—But, papa, I was so deeply interested in the news of his uncle's death that I didn't notice how late it was. You see, his uncle died in Africa last week and left $100,000, and, of course—

Stern Father—As I was saying when you interrupted me, I want you to understand that he can stay just as late as he wants to. I don't mind if the gas meter does have to work overtime occasionally.—Indianapolis Star.

How Purple Dye Was Discovered.

It is often said that the old Phoenicians discovered the purple dye in the murex shell by observing a dog which had eaten one of the mollusks and thus colored his chops with a rich purple stain. The ancients were accused to have hunted the murex by the means of pointer dogs. Some of them say that Herodotus by the aid of his dog first discovered the purple murex.

Age asks with timidity to be spared intolerable pain. Youth, taking fortune by the beard, demands joy like a right, Uncle Jim strode out with a heavy greeting, and, at the sound of the voices of no one but Gall and Mrs. Davies, and Houston Van Ploom, old "Daddy" Manning appeared in the doorway, followed by the rector.

"The sweetest flower that blows in any date," quoted "Daddy" Manning, patting Gall's hand affectionately.

The rector stood by, waiting to greet her, after Manning had monopolized her a foolish moment, and the newly aroused eye for color in him settled upon the gold and blue and red of her straight Egyptian costume, and recognized in them part of her endless variety. The black on her ladies' Ho was close enough to see that; and he marvelled at himself that he could not disapprove.

Gall was most uncomfortably aware of his own in this meeting; but she turned to him with a frank smile of friendliness.

"This looks like a conspiracy," she commented, glancing towards the study, which was thick with smoke.

"It's an offensively innocent one," returned Manning, giving the rector but small chance. "We're discussing plans for the now Vedder court tem-

"Oh!" observed Gall, and radiated a distinct chill, whereupon Rev. Smith Boyd, divesting himself of some courteous compliment, exchanged inanities with Mrs. Davies and young Van Ploom, and took his committee back into the study.

Mrs. Davies remained but a moment or so. She even seemed eager to retire, and as she left the library, she cast a hopeful backward glance at the danceling Gall and the correct young Van Ploom who, with his Dutch complexion and his blonde English mustache and his stalwart American body, so anything of his being a Van Ploom, represented to her the ideal of masculine perfection. He was an eligible who never did anything a second too early or a second too late, or deviated by one syllable from the exact things he should say.

If the anxious Aunt Helen had counted on any important results from this evening's opportunities, she had not taken into her calculations the attractiveness of Gall. In precisely five minutes Van Ploom was on the doortop, with his inverted on his shoulders and his silk hat in his hand, without even having approached the elaborate introduction to certain important remarks he had definitely decided to make. Gall might not have been able to rid himself of him so easily, for he was a person of considerable momentum, but he had rather planned to make a more deliberate ceremony of the matter, impulsive opportunities not being in his line of thought.

A tall young man in an Inverness walked rapidly past the door while Van Ploom was saying the correctly clever things in the way of salutes; and before she had closed the door on Van Ploom, Dick Bradley walked into the house with careless nonchalance.

"Glorious, Dicky," you can't come in!" protested Gall, with half-frowning, half-laughing remonstrance. "It's a fearful hour for calls."

"I'm a friend of the family," insisted Dick, calmly closing the door behind them and hanging his hat on the rack. "I guess you've forgotten the program."

"Oh, yes, the proposal. Well, here it goes."

"All right," he agreed, and taking her arm and tucking her shoulder comfortably close to him, he walked easily with her back to the library. Arrived there, he seated her on her favorite chair, and drew up another one squarely in front of her.

"I'm going to shock you to death," he told her. "I'm going to propose seriously to you."

Some laughing retort was on her lips, but she caught a look in his eyes which suddenly stopped her.

"I am very much in earnest about it, Gall," and his voice bore the stamp of deep sincerity. "I love you, I want you to be my wife."

"Dick," protested Gall, and it was she who reached out and plucked her hand from his. The action was too suddenly frank for him to mistake it.

"I was afraid you'd think that was about it," he said, his voice full of a pain of which they neither one had believed him capable. "This is the first time I ever proposed, except in fun, and I want to make you take me seriously. Gall, I've said so many pretty things to you, this time, when I am in such desperate earnest, there's nothing left but just to try to tell you how much I love you, how much I want you!" He stopped, and, holding her hand, patting it gently with unconscious tenderness, he gazed earnestly into her eyes. His own were entirely without that burning glow which had, for so long, betrayed on all the young and beautiful. They were almost somber now, and in their depth was a humble whiteness which made Gall's heart flow out to him.

"I can't Dick," she told him, smiling affectionately at him. "You're the greatest boy in the world, and I want you for my friend as long as we live; for my very dear friend!"

He studied her in silence for a moment, and then he put his hands on her cheeks, and drew her gently towards him. Still smiling into his eyes, she held up her lips, and he kissed her.

"I'd like to say something jolly before I go," he said as rose; "but I can't seem to think of it."

Gall laughed, but there was a trace of moisture in her eyes as she took his arm.

"I'd like to help you out, Dicky, but I can't think of it either," she retorted.

She was crying a little when she went up the stairs, and her mood was not even interrupted by the fact that Aunt Helen's door was ajar, and that Aunt Helen stood just beyond the crack.

"Why, child, that Egyptian black is running," was Aunt Helen's first observation.

Gall dabbed hastily at the two tiny rivulets which had delated at the

"The grand duke looked them over with a keen eye.

"I am rather disappointed," he confessed in excellent English. "I had understood that you wished to control our entire railway system."

"I do," asserted Allison; "but I don't wish to pay out money for them all if I can acquire the lines I have, and the others will be controlled quite easily from the fact that I shall have the only outlet."

"The grand duke, who had played poker in America and fainted in China and roulette in Monte Carlo, and all the other games throughout the world, smiled with his impressive big eyes, and put his hand up under his beard.

"The matter then seems to resolve itself into a question of price," he commented.

"No; protection," responded Allison.

"If I were buying these railroads outright, I should expect my property interests to be guarded, even if I had to appeal to international equity; but I can not."

"No," admitted the grand duke. "They cannot be purchased."

"The proposition resolves itself then into a matter of virtual commercial seizure," Allison pointed out.

The grand duke, still with his hand in his beard, chuckled, as he regarded Allison amusedly.

"I shall not mind if you call it patriotic," he observed. "We, in Russia, must collect our revenues as we can, and we are as frank as Americans about it. Returning to your matter of protection, I shall admit that the only agreement upon which we hold in international equity, and, in consequence, the only protection I can give you is in my personal word that you will not be molested in anything which you wish to do, providing it is pleasant to myself and those I represent."

"Then we'll make it an annual payment," decided Allison, putting away some figures he had prepared. "We'll make it a sliding scale, increasing each year with the earnings."

"Never!" and the neat-waisted caller once more touched himself on the breast.

"It would be compelled to negotiate a loan. If other governments, through some understanding among their bankers, found it difficult to provide this loan, your government would find it necessary to release its ownership, or at least its control of its most valuable commercial possessions."

The caller, who had followed Allison's progressive statement with interest, gave a quick little nod of his head.

"That most valuable commercial possession," went on Allison, "is the state railroads. You were convinced by my agit that there is a new and powerful force in the world, or you would not be here. Suppose I point out that it is possible to so cramp your banking system that you could not help your country, if you would; suppose I show you that, in the end, your ancient enemy will be to his identity, while your country remains intact; suppose I show you that the course I have proposed is the only way open which will save your country from annihilation?" What then?"

The neat-waisted caller, with the first slow motion he had used since he came into the room, drew the slip of paper towards him again.

"There was something so uncanny about this that even the practical Allison was shocked for an instant, and then he added,

"Poor Dicky," she explained, and walked into her own room.

curve of her pink chaise, and then she put her head on Aunt Helen's shoulder, and went softly.

"Poor Dicky," she explained, and then turning, disappeared into her own room.

Mrs. Helen Davies looked after her speculatively for a moment; but she decided not to follow.

CHAPTER XIX.

The Makers of Maps.

There began to be strange new stirrings in the world. Money! From the land which was its home and place of abode, it leaped over across the wide seas, and made potent whisperings in the ears of those countries where money is despised and held vulgar.

They all listened. The particular potency lay in the fact that the money was so big, which took away from the despisedness and its vulgarity.

"Let me first discuss the bonus," proposed Allison, and quite unobtrusively he had put out of his mind certain figures he had prepared to suggest. Apparently the grand duke needed a large supply of immediate cash, and, as annual payments thereafter would need to be decreased accordingly, with still another percentage deducted for profit on the duke's necessities.
